SUMMARY

There was a herd of elephants in the forest, in which there was an old elephant who used to teach good things to the little elephants that how they should live together and maintain peace among themselves. If they want to eat anything, they should share it with everyone and if any problem arises, everyone should face it altogether.

But one of them named Bukka was a naughty elephant, who never used to listen to his elders because he used to think that he would grow up and one day become the leader of this herd. Hearing complaints from everyone, the leader decided to teach Bukka a lesson.
So, he left him alone in the forest to make him realize the importance to live together in a herd and how they can stay safe by being in the herd. After realizing all these things, Bukka corrects himself and no one ever complains.
